Introduction

The goal of this course is to market marketing to health educators. That is - help you see many more benefits than costs to using commercial or business marketing techniques for improving individual and public health.

Marketing has received quite a bit of “bad” press as reflected by part of the title of the book by Gerard Hastings which is “. . . Why should the Devil have all the best tunes?” And John Quelch wrote in the Harvard Business School’s Working Knowledge that “Many dismiss marketing as manipulative, deceptive, and intrusive. Marketing, they argue, focuses too much of our attention on material consumption.” He also states “manipulation and deception of consumers by irresponsible marketers is all too common.”

Jay Bernhardt, director of CDC’s National Health Marketing Center, wrote in one of your reading assignments “Successful commercial marketing can mean the difference between a company’s profit and loss, jobs or layoffs, growth or bankruptcy. Mention the word marketing to public health professionals, and you may get blank stares, head shakes, or looks of confusion.” Cigarette makers and fast food companies are effective at marketing and we can use the exact same techniques they use for “selling” use of behaviors that cultivate health. Those behaviors might be to influence policy makers to vote for more walkable community projects as well as better eating or physical activity behaviors.

The course starts with a history of marketing from the early 20th century when marketing involved production and supply and demand to the transition years of the 60s and 70s when concepts of consumerism, to this century which includes the thought that non-profit organizations can be in the American Marketing Association’s definition of marketing.

The course concludes with variations of definitions of health marketing and examples of how marketing can be and is being used to enhance health.

NOTE: You have 2 ways to “read” the text of articles and web pages. You can choose to read text from pdf files or web pages. You can also listen to the same text via MP3/Audio files.

PDF and HTML Files

You'll need Adobe Reader or another program that opens pdf files. Permalinks in the Division assignments that follow take you to the Congressional Research Service online version.

To open these files click the left button of your mouse. Be sure you are connected to the internet

To save files to your computer click the right button and follow instructions on the screen.

AUDIO Files

These are the same text from articles and web pages. They are spoken at about 125 words per minute so listening time is about twice that of reading the pdf files or web pages. The text can sound awkward since it is converted to speech using text-to-speech software. Also, text may have gone through several conversions from pdf to Word to plain text before conversion to speech. As a result some words are not pronounced the way we're familiar. A suggestion is to listen for the concepts in the article and try to ignore the voice.

What to Use for Listening: Audio files read from assignment text are in mp3 format. You can listen to these with many programs such as Windows Media Player, RealPlayer or QuickTime. If you prefer to listen to these you may need to set options on your browser to open in a specific one or download and save to your hard drive. Also, download to listen on an Ipad or an Iphone.

To open these files click the left button of your mouse. Be sure you are connected to the internet.

To save files to your computer click the right button and follow instructions on the screen.
